PreK-12 Writing Continuum

Preconventional and Emerging

- Uses drawing, scribbling, or other approximations in place of letters or words to convey meaning (may look like adding name to work, strings of letters or letter shapes, copying environmental print, minimal letter/sound correlation is evident)
- Some concepts of print may be evident (left to right and progressively downward directional pattern, spaces between mock words, writing begins to show organization in one area on a page).
- Heavy reliance on oral language and drawings to convey a sense of story or explanation of a familiar topic.

Developing and Early Writing

- Begins to write sentences about a topic, often in list form.
- Begins to spell words using initial and final consonant and some familiar words may be spelled correctly.
- Begins to use spacing between words, ending punctuation and capitals.
- Print work matches the story conveyed in drawings.

Transitional

- Writes connected sentences about a topic that may sound more like a summary.
- One-to-one relationships between letters and sounds are represented.
- Begins to spell most words correctly, with reliance on phonics knowledge to spell more difficult words.
- Uses ending punctuation, capital letters, and some transition words.

Conventional

- Writes to a specific audience and purpose.
- Writing is focused and has an organizational pattern.
- Uses prewriting strategies, such as a matrix with multiple texts, or other graphic organizer with single texts.
- Spelling is generally correct and few convention errors.
- Focuses attention more to word choice and sentence variation.

- Writes to emphasize meaning and evoke reaction.
- Controls and shapes writing independently.
- Writes with more sophisticated vocabulary and mature syntax.
- Manipulates conventions and word choice for stylistic effect.
- Writes routinely over short and extended time frames.
- Integrates reading and writing.
- Plans for writing using PEARL paragraph structure.
